Hold Your Head

Don't get scared. Business will continue in a satisfactory way if the U. S. is in war and the country has been advised to practice economy.

We are reproducing a page from a large wholesalers house paper that was published this week that deals with this question. Read it.

THE WAR

AMERICA'S entrance into the world war has aroused much eager questioning as to the conflict's probable effect upon business. The outlook is decidedly reassuring. The country's leading experts believe that business, far from being harmed by the expansion of the war, will be benefited by it very materially.

This conclusion is based on a careful survey of things as they exist now. In this survey everything was taken at its face valuation. No effort was made to make anything appear more favorable than it really was. No facts, unwelcome or otherwise, were covered up.

Unless some unthinkable thing transpires, the war will not reach American soil. It is only in keeping with economic laws that under these conditions America should prosper on a vast scale even though we are at war.

Congress has just authorized war expenditures reaching the stupendous sum of seven billion dollars. Of this staggering amount, three billion will be loaned to America's allies. Naturally most of it will be spent right here in America.

Everybody will have a job. Indeed, if the present plans of the government work out, every able bodied person not serving in a military way will be forced to work—to help man the country's industries and other business enterprises and till the soil.

Europe and America must be fed.

In addition to all this must be considered the all-compelling fact that America now has more ready money than any nation in the world. The banks are full of it.

Factories are struggling with merchandise orders that will keep them going at the utmost capacity for a year.

Looking at the thing even from a pessimistic angle, cold hard logic forces one to the conclusion that America is going right on prospering.

There will be burdens. This is only natural. Everybody must bear his share.

But there is not a fraction of the reason for trepidation that there was when the trouble in Europe started. And everybody knows how absolutely groundless the fears of business men proved at that time.

Have confidence.

This is a time of opportunity for those who will use it.
